

Job Site Work Groups

This solution is to have workers stay with those who they work with to complete tasks and, if possible, who they travel with. Workers are assigned to a work group or family to limit the number of workers exposed on a regular basis and minimize transmission if one of the workers becomes ill with COVID-19.

Work groups or families perform all of their work-related activities together including:

- work tasks
- same work hours
- same work location each day
- possibly travel to and from work together

The workers are expected to social distance as much as possible and may communicate and create work procedures that allow for greater consistency for social distancing. Working in groups can also help with contact tracing should one of the workers become ill or exposed to someone with COVID symptoms. This is helpful because if a contractor is staying consistent with having workers stay in the same group then they can identify exposures much faster.